

CHAPO
design PHILIPPE STARCK

«When Alec Guinness, James Stewart and Fred Astaire got home in the evening, with a sharp and elegant gesture they would throw their hat onto anything within reach. So why not a lamp? Chapo is precisely the result of this gesture. Swaggering and elegant.» Philippe Starck Throwing one's hat onto a stand is a seductive and slightly swankering masculine gesture from bygone times. It has an irreverent and retro charm reminiscent of a cinematographic image that is an inescapable part of our visual baggage. All this underlies the Chapo table lamp, a playful gesture that becomes a three-dimensional and theatrical object, a lamp whose style, character and shape can change depending on the hat that is placed on top of it.

The design of Chapo is essential and pure: an aluminium stem that starts from the corner of a small, thin and square-shaped base, and terminates with an LED light whose mock shade comes in the form of a real hat.

Direct light table lamp. Aluminium structure with transparent methacrylate diffuser.
